Dec 2013

A big, rich Cornas that dishes out classic, slightly old school notes of crushed stone, violets, blueberry, blackberry and assorted meaty qualities, the 2011 Cornas Rebelle has full-bodied power and a muscular, structured feel on the palate. Spending 24 months in neutral barrels, it's more than a little impressive and will have 12-15 years of longevity.

More modern in style, the 2011 Crozes Hermitage Georges Reynaud (100% Syrah aged 12 months in equal parts barrel and concrete tank) offers a rich, polished and creamy profile with ample blackberry jam, toast, spice box and tinges of chocolate. Medium-bodied, balanced and delicious, it's a solid value and will drink beautifully for 7-8 years, possibly upwards of a decade.

More classic in style, as well as a gorgeous Syrah, the 2011 Crozes Hermitage Les Croix is deep, rich and textured, with textbook blackberry and raspberry fruit, charred earth, smoked meat and leather aromas and flavors. Medium to full-bodied, concentrated and fresh on the palate, with integrated acidity and fine tannin, it will deliver the goods over the coming decade.

Also impressive, as well as a good value, the borderline outstanding 2011 Saint Joseph 350M is a medium-bodied, pure and classy Syrah that offers plenty of smoke, leather and black raspberry in its elegant and lively profile. Comprised of 100% Syrah that was aged 40% in demi-muid and 60% in concrete tanks, it should drink nicely for 7-8 years.
